

Druids Desire (Ancient Highland Romance)

Amidst the far-flung Pictish highlands of northern Britain, young lovers Marra and Cail have been carrying on together in happiness and relative secrecy. For much of his life Cail has walked the path of the druid - the priestly and law-speaking caste of their people - and his decade of training is nearing its end. Cail is suddenly stricken, however, by a crisis of faith - to his great dismay, he can no longer feel the presence of his gods. Fearing that he has been abandoned, he consults his druid teachers for guidance, and they deliver to him a shocking verdict - it is Cail's great love for Marra that impairs his communion with the divine ones, they claim, and he cannot join the ranks of the druids until he has separated himself from her once and for all.
