

The Swedenborg Library (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Swedenborg Library There has been much controversy among Christians about the relative importance of the three great articles of religion treated of in the following pages. That this volume will end the controversy, is hardly to be expected. The Editor believes, however, that in all the theological libraries of Christendom there cannot be found, within the same compass, half as much wholesome teaching or high and heavenly wisdom on these interesting and momentous themes, as these 224 small pages contain. The reader will here get a complete view of what the New Theology teaches concerning Charity, Faith and Works; and will learn, too, not only the nature of each, spiritually regarded, but that neither is genuine, nor can even exist as a reality, apart from the other two. He will see that their union or coexistence is indispensable to angelhood and to all true manhood - indispensable, therefore, to the souls salvation, or to the existence of that truly human life which the term implies. It will further be seen that wherever this heavenly trine exists, there we have an image of the Divine Trinity.
