 * e book authored by Value Bar Prep books

The bar separates passing examinees from failing ones using a number of criteria. One common yard stick is the multi-state bar examination, a test of quick legal thinking and summary skill. Candidates tend to assume that they will pass the MBE. Many do not. The reason is that the questions have one interrogatory but several testing points. Two of them are argument comprehension and fact association. The MBE material the candidate is familiar with will usually test simply for a correct answer. For this reason the candidate arrives at the examination unprepared to pass, since on the actual examination the correct answers can be selected only after comprehensive association between hypo, interrogatory and deliberative refinement. By the time a candidate has gone through these MBEs at least two times they should develop the peculiar insight that all passing candidates possess. They should be able to score in the very high MBE numbers without much difficulty.
