Asher, returning battle-weary to the castle, is intrigued when the guards drag in a captured spy. She's beautiful and defiant and an enemy...and he won't let anyone question her but himself. He'll find a way to make her tell her secrets, using her own passions and desires against her. Excerpt from The Captured Spy: My steps made stony echoes in the stairwell. I'd hardly ever visited the dungeons. It seemed a strange new dimension, an odd twist in my familiar home. The walls shone wet in the torchlight, damp with mold. I shivered in the chill. My weariness, my battle-induced apathy, it had all dissolved away, replaced by a feverish eagerness. I tried to plan out what to say to her. But my mind kept returning to the things I wanted to do. I thought of seizing her black braid, pulling her head back to suck the smooth slope of her neck. I thought of slitting her clothes open, peeling them away until she was naked and shivering. Most of all I couldn't stop imagining how it would feel to plunge myself inside of her, to feel her soft flesh clenching around me, to make her cry her pleasure as she strained at her bonds. She was in the room at the end of the corridor. Not a cell, but a torture room. It was laid out like some artist's chamber, tools organized carefully. She was spreadeagled in the center, like a canvas of flesh, ready to be marked, pigmented with blood. I shook my head, clearing away the grisly images. "Leave." I gestured the guards away. "But watch the exit." The door thudded shut. They'd stripped her down to her undergarments. I hadn't expected that. The sight of her splayed out nearly naked made me stiff. She lay back in her bonds, her skin luxuriant in the torchlight. She was breathing slow, calm. Not mummified with fear, not collapsing in on herself listlessly like prisoners I'd seen before. Her eyes were alive and defiant. With her hands and feet pinioned, she had to crane her neck to look at me. A dark strand of hair strayed across her eyes and she shook her head to clear her vision.
