

An Extraordinary Evening ~ The fourth novelette from Forbidden Feelings, a Gay Victorian Romance and Erotic novelette collection. Vol. II.

Summary: William Heatherton and his closest friend, Robin Crawley, are two of the most notorious rakehells in London, infamous for breaking hearts and creating scandals wherever they go. The day after the grand Rosenfelts ball, the opening event of the season, William Heatherton wakes up in his four-poster bed with a terrible headache and only vague memories of what happened the evening before, but with an odd feeling that something rather unusual has occurred... An extract from the story: William froze. It was one thing to know that his closest friend had a taste and preference for gentlemen; however, it was an entirely different matter to stumble upon him and another man together, only half-dressed and kissing each other deeply while tearing at each others clothes. A soldiers uniform jacket lay deserted on the ground together with Robins dove-grey waistcoat and silk shirt.

He knew that he should leave as discreetly and quickly as possible; however, William found it impossible to take his eyes off the two men and swiftly hid behind a stone column. There was something untamed and feral about the way that they kissed and hastily undressed each other, oblivious to the chilly night, which was nothing like the gentle and careful lovemaking with a lady. Keywords: London, voyeurism, iced champagne, gay-for-you, M/M romance About the author: Lady T.
